FOREWORD.

This pamphlet is the result of my being weatherbound during Easter 1938, and it is published in the hope that it may prove interesting, if not useful, to students and collectors of New Zealand Literature. The items described herein are in my own Library of New Zealand Literature. To Miss Joan Klue, my grateful thanks is due, for so carefully and willingly preparing the typescript.

SOME BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SUGGESTIONS.

What Constitutes N.Z. Literature.

Let us assume in the first place that "Literature" comprises all "printed matter." This of course is a wide, colloquial meaning of the term, but any narrower or more reputable meaning would place the bibliographer of New Zealand literature in serious difficulty. Imagine, for instance, defining literature as "writings whose value lies in beauty of form or emotional effect." New Zealand literature according to such a definition is practically non-existent. Then we find it impossible to draw the line between books, booklets, pamphlets, brochures, periodicals, magazines, newspapers, leaflets and single leaves. Williams in his "Bibliography of Printed Maori to 1900," (note the "printed Maori" not "Maori Literature") deals with over 1200 items, half of which are of not more than four pages, while many of these are just folded sheets, single leaves, notices, circulars, lesson sheets, placards or proclamations. Each of these is a New Zealand item complete in itself, but a New Zealand bibliography must not ignore articles, chapters or even important references bearing on New Zealand, in books otherwise beyond the scope of New Zealand literature. What should we do about that much-quoted reference of Macaulay's made in 1824 to a "New Zealander"? Intriguing speculation though it certainly is, yet it adds nothing to our sum of knowledge with respect to New Zealand, so for our purposes it must be ignored. To include all ponderable references to New Zealand made during the infant stage of the colony, seems to be justifiable; but it would be well-nigh impossible and would serve little purpose, to include references made after New Zealand was granted responsible government in 1853.

The next assumption is not quite so easy. What are we to assume is covered by New Zealand in the term "New Zealand literature"? (Geographically and politically, New Zealand comprises the North and South Islands, Stewart's Island, The Chatham Islands, Auckland Islands, Three Kings Islands, Antipodes, etc., The Kermadec Islands, Cook Islands, Niue Island, etc., Western Samoa, Union Islands, and The Ross Dependency. When New Zealand is mentioned hereafter it is understood to cover the above territory.) The broadest denotation would cover:—

- (i) All matter printed in New Zealand irrespective of subject or language.
- (ii) All matter about New Zealand printed anywhere in any language.
- (iii) All matter by New Zealanders, about anything, printed and published anywhere.

Obviously this is too wide, and so we must look for a common-sense, workable definition of "New Zealand literature." For the purposes of a bibliography, which of course is the only aspect being considered here, this definition must change as the country leaves its leading strings; it must however draw the lines of demarcation clearly and firmly, and yet be elastic enough to meet exceptional cases.

Keeping these points in mind then, we think that the scope of a Bibliography of New Zealand literature or rather a Bibliography relating to New Zealand Literature, should be somewhat as follows:

(a) Up till the end of 1852.

- (i) All printed matter in any language printed in New Zealand.
- (ii) All printed matter in any language, printed elsewhere, but having a direct bearing on New Zealand, whether such matter is complete in itself, or whether it be incorporated in any newspaper, periodical or book.

(b) From 1853 to 1900.

- (i) All printed matter in any language printed in New Zealand.
- (ii) All printed matter in any language, having a direct bearing on New Zealand, but excluding mere references, an odd chapter or an article.

(c) From 1900 onwards.

All printed matter in any language, having a direct bearing on New Zealand or its inhabitants, but excluding mere references, etc.

Up until 1853, the year in which New Zealand became a self-governing colony, the scope of our inquiry would thus be very wide. From then till 1900 and onwards, references in books and periodicals would be excluded from our bibliography, unless the case was of exceptional importance. From 1900 onwards such things as religious and economic pamphlets would be excluded, unless having a direct bearing on New Zealand.

Having fixed the scope of the bibliography we must now decide upon what information should be given concerning the items to be listed. This information should be concise, complete, and methodically set out. The following seems to be the irreducible minimum:—

- (i) Author's name.
- (ii) An exact account of the title-page.
- (iii) The format.
- (iv) The pagination.
- (v) An account of the maps and the illustrations, if any.
- (vi) The publisher's name and the date of publication, if these are not to be found on the title-page.
- (vii) The number published, if that is known.
- (viii) In the case of very rare leaves and leaflets, the millimetric measurement of the actual area of the typed page and also the size of the type.
- (ix) Any other factual explanation that is considered necessary; but no expression of opinion on the subject-matter of any publication should on any account be given, interesting though it might be.

The next problem facing a bibliographer is a more difficult one—the problem of classification and arrangement. It is easy enough to catalogue a lot of books, but quite another matter to classify them. There seems to be no doubt that the arrangement should be chronological with the year as the base, and then under each year alphabetical by authors. Hocken in his Bibliography of New Zealand Literature follows this plan, but for easy reference the items should be numbered consecutively as is done by Williams in his Bibliography of Printed Maori. Williams however does not arrange his items alphabetically. Granted that in very many cases Williams deals with religious tracts, portions of the Scripture, proclamations and anonymous material, still he could have arranged the titles alphabetically.

The most serious trouble comes with undated items. Wherever possible a date should be assigned, and then if there is the slightest doubt, queried. The date can be correctly fixed sometimes from external evidence such as newspapers, other books, diaries, etc., and sometimes from internal evidence. A reference to the evidence on which the assignment of the date is made should then be given. In an undated pamphlet which is described hereafter, is to be found the following statement:—"We entered Dusky Sound and dropped anchor close to the spot where Captain Cook lay with his ship, the Resolution, on the occasion of his second voyage to these seas just 123 years ago." This statement was written on 20th May, but no year is given, yet it seems reasonably safe to assume that the pamphlet was published in 1773 plus 123, i.e. in 1896 (?). A little reasonable assumption with regard to dates would lessen the long list of undated works that must be the bane of every bibliographer. All bibliographers will sympathise with Williams when he says: "It is too much to hope that it will ever be made a criminal offence to issue a book without its date . . ."

Now that the literature of and relating to New Zealand is so voluminous, a classification is essential. Collier attempted it in 1889, but Hocken, except in his Index and his Maori publications, does no classifying beyond keeping the Maori items separate and then adding five pages of what he calls "Varia"—Proclamations, notices and documents. Collier classified under 33 headings, but fewer would serve the purpose. An elaborate classification such as Dewey's would be out of place. Subject-matter must form the basis of the classification, but unscientific though it may be to do so, "forme" must also be considered. The following broad classification is suggested:—

- A Books and pamphlets criticising or supporting the government of the day. That is, works mainly political.
- B Biography and Auto-biography.
- C Writings relating to Church and Religion. Sermons, etc., but not Church history, which is placed under H.
- D Descriptive prose. Sometimes hard to distinguish from T.
- F Fiction. Imaginative tales and novels.
- G Government publications. Reports of Commissions, Proclamations, Documents, Regulations, etc.
- H Mainly historical.
- L Foreign Language other than Maori.
- M Maori Language. These could be separately classified and would form a volume to themselves. Williams has done the spade-work here.
- N Newspapers. These could be classified according to place of publication. See Scholefield's "Union Catalogue of Newspapers."
- P Periodicals and Magazines.
- R References in other publications, before 1853 only.
- S Scientific writings. These could be further classified into the various sciences.

- T Travel, Exploration, and Discovery, but not merely "impressions of journeys."
- V Verse printed and published in New Zealand.
- X Miscellaneous. Anything that could not reasonably be placed under any of the other heads, such as, Bibliographies, Catalogues, Dictionaries, Grammars, Directories and Almanacks.
- Z Prose printed and published in New Zealand, but having no bearing on New Zealand. (Up to 1900 only.)

The future Bibliography will no doubt be produced in uniform volumes, with perhaps the Index to the whole as a separate volume still. e.g. Vol. i, A & G; Vol. ii, B, D, H, R, T; Vol. iii, N & P; Vol. iv, L & M; Vol. v, F, V, & Z; Vol. vi, S & X; Vol. vii, Index.

Collier has what he called his "Chronological Catalogue" and then follows his "Classified Catalogue." These two could now be brought together, so that there would be a chronological, classified arrangement, or rather the classified lists would be arranged chronologically, and the items in each class numbered consecutively. A very useful Appendix to any bibliography would be a table of the usual sizes of publications together with the designations used by the publishing trade. To complete this Bibliography it would be necessary to have two Indexes—(i) Authors, (ii) Titles—each item indexed having both page and classification reference. Before proceeding to give a practical demonstration of this scheme, let us take a glance at the Bibliographies of New Zealand Literature already in existence.

Up to the present, apart from those authors who made out odd lists of publications bearing on New Zealand and mentioned these in their books, New Zealand literature has had five Bibliographers. The first was J. D. Davis, of the staff of the Auckland "Evening Star," who, in 1887, published a small volume of 77 pages entitled, "Contributions towards a Bibliography of New Zealand." This was followed in 1889 by a work entitled, "The Literature relating to New Zealand: a Bibliography," the author being J. Collier, a former Librarian of the General Assembly Library at Wellington. Collier was a scholarly writer as is shown by his "Life of Sir George Grey," published in 1909. Before coming to New Zealand Collier was an assistant to the great Herbert Spencer, so that his training must have been sound. Davis lists over 600 publications and Collier over 1200. Next comes the work that must form the basis of all future bibliographies—T. M. Hocken's, "A Bibliography of the Literature relating to New Zealand," published in 1909. This volume contains a detailed account of about 4000 Items. On the title-page is a Maori saying which aptly sums up the situation, "He Mahi nui rawa atu." ("Truly this is a very laborious deed.") All who are interested in New Zealand literature, whether student, collector, or dealer, lie under an obligation to Dr. Hocken and willingly acknowledge their indebtedness to him.

In 1927, A. H. Johnstone of the staff of Whitcombe and Tombs Ltd., Christchurch, published a "Supplement to Hocken's Bibliography of New Zealand Literature," in which he marshalled over 500 items not listed by Hocken. This was no easy task and credit must be given to the compiler, who also listed the principal additions to New Zealand literature since 1909. Future Bibliographers will, of course, have to include all the additions since 1909, but this should not be so very difficult, as for some years now a record has been kept in the General Assembly Library of all printed matter published in New Zealand.

"A Bibliography of Printed Maori to 1900," compiled by Herbert Williams was published in 1924. In this there are listed and described 1009 items. This volume represents a most difficult task excellently accomplished. Williams issued in 1928 a supplement in which he corrected some mistakes in the first volume, and also noted an additional 80 items. His work is a pattern for future bibliographers. One other work of a bibliographical nature deserves mention here, and that is, "A Union Catalogue of New Zealand Newspapers" compiled by Dr. Guy H. Scholefield, Chief Librarian of the General Assembly Library, Wellington, and published 1938. Although in his preface the compiler states that "the catalogue is a finding list, and is not to be regarded as a bibliography," yet until a bibliography of New Zealand Newspapers is published, this more-than-catalogue will go a long way towards serving the purpose. This work shows evidence of much thorough and patient search, and has put on record most of the information required by the future Bibliographer of New Zealand Newspapers.

These men have all done splendid work, but the very nature of their task makes it inevitable that they should miss some of the items for which they search. Johnstone wrongfully charges Hocken with omissions on at least two occasions. (i) On page 29 of his supplement he lists Reischek's "Story of a Wonderful Dog, etc.," which can be found in Hocken p. 400, and (ii) on page 33, the item, "N.Z. and the Next Great War. A Note of Warning," by Artemidorus, which can be found in Hocken on p. 427.

Having said this, we must be sure to add to this brochure those cryptic letters E. & O.E.—the subterfuge of accountants when presenting a balance-sheet. Nothing now remains but for us to marshal a few items (116) published in 1909 or earlier, that we have not been able to find in the compilations of the Bibliographers mentioned herein, and to arrange them according to the suggestions outlined.

Evidently Hocken failed to notice that Vol. II of Carleton's work was not published until three years after
 Vol. I, and that its title-page varies from that of Vol. I.
 In Hocken p. 289 it appears as if the two volumes were published in 1874. Another explanation might be that there was a second printing of Vol. II in 1877, but this is unlikely. Vol. I was printed at the Herald Office, Wynd-

Crown 4to. Pp. 8.

A verbatim report of the address given by Major Kemp (Meiha Keepa te Rangihwinui) at the Bar of the Legislative Council on Tuesday, 6th October, 1896. Kemp alleged that the Horowhenua Commission had made an unjust finding. In its report the Commission found that Subdivision 14 which Kemp held under Land Transfer certificate, was really trust property belonging to the Muaupoko Tribe. There was before the House a Bill, which Kemp considered summarily confiscated this land from him ; hence his appearance before the Council.

Z.2. Bickerton, A. W.

A | New Story of the Stars | — | By A. W. Bickerton | (Then follow eleven lines containing a recital of the author's scholastic honours and positions. L.J.B.C.) | Portion of a diagram showing the mode of the Origin of Temporary and Variable Stars, printed in 1879. | (Next comes the diagram. L.J.B.C.) | The Triplicity of the new Star in the Chariot and the high velocity of two | of its components demonstrated by the Astronomers of Europe and America | in the year 1892. | Christchurch, N.Z.: | Whitcombe & Tombs Limited | Bickerton Brothers. | Crown 8vo. Pp. 87.

Z.3. Bound in with this work is an Appendix entitled "A New Story of the Stars" | By Professor Bickerton. | This is separately paginated from 1 to 20, the type being 12-point, while that of the 87 pages is 8-point.

- Z.4. Then follows a pamphlet intended for publication, but not previously released. The title-page reads: Reply to Critics | on | "A New Story of the Stars" | by | Prof. A. W. Bickerton | New Zealand University | — | Christchurch | H. A. Cooper, "Bijou" Printing Office, 212, Colombo St. | 1895. |

Pp. 16. This type is 12-point.

On verso of title-page is a full-page diagram illustrating Bickerton Cosmic Theory.

- Z.5. Yet another pamphlet follows entitled, "A New Story of the Stars, | No. II. | The | General Problem | of | Stellar Collision | — | (Eleven lines of prefatory matter follow this. L.J.B.C.) Christchurch, N.Z.: | Smith, Anthony, Sellars and Company, Limited. | MDCCCXCVI. | Pp. 22. Type 12-point.

On the verso of the title-page is a diagram comprising four figures to illustrate Professor Bickerton's Cosmic Theory and showing an impact of two dead Suns forming a temporary and two variable Stars. This collection of pamphlets closes with Opinions of the Press paginated (i) to (vi).

To throw further light on this little volume, the Preface is here quoted in full:—

"The following articles were published in the Lyttelton Times as an attempt to give popular form to a new cosmic philosophy based on Partial Impact and Selective Molecular Escape.

"A series of pamphlets had previously been projected, and two of the series were printed. The first—'The History and Scope of the Story'—was sent to some of the more important newspapers of the world and evoked a mass of criticism, earlier portions of which are referred to in 'Reply to Critics.' 'The Phenomena of Cosmic Impact' has not heretofore been published. 'The Reply to Critics' and 'The Phenomena of Cosmic Impact' are appended in further elucidation of the theory."

1898.

- Z.6. "W.G.P."

The | Birth of a Star | — | By W.G.P. | (In the Sydney Morning Herald) | — | 1898. | Printed at the "Lyttelton Times" Office.
